

Dear Campers...

As the BMX bike show wowed our camp yesterday with incredible stunts (can the head staff be spared next time??) it became clear that there was a deeper message to all of us. Color war breakout!... or not. But truth be told there is something to be learned from Jay and Cory. And while wearing a helmet is important, what is even more important is the commitment it takes to reach such a level of skill. Imagine how many hours of practice, of bruises, of failure, moments of doubting themselves that must go into such an incredible profession. Are any of us in line to do a 360 degree twist? Probably not. Is doing a flip on a bike in our future? Doubtful. But all of us have moments in our lives as Bnei Torah in which we doubt ourselves. Am I good enough in learning? Is my davening up to par? How about watching how I speak to a teammate or an opponent? Throughout the course of a year and a summer we all experience ups and downs. Ups and downs in leagues, in how we feel, and in how we make others feel. But isn't that what being a Yid is all about. כי נפלתי קמתי. It's the battle with the yetzer hara that makes us stronger. It's what Hashem wants from us. And at the end of the day, THAT is a profession worth pursuing.

Have a great shabbos,

Rabbi Schonfeld
