

Dear Campers...

What a fantastic week! Shteiging, intense sports, intercamp, play-offs, championships! Yes, the schedule was great, however it is both campers and staff that create the magic and energy that makes each day special. As we head into the three weeks, let's focus and appreciate the greatness of each Yid. Ahavas Chinam. Our teammate, counselor, or bunk mate; they are truly great [even when they miss a shot]. Let's also remember that Hashem is always with us, even if things sometimes may look bleak. If we look for it we can see Hashem in our lives.
*Have a wonderful restful Shabbos

THE GROMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION

WOW. What a week. Who knew we could do so much while only having 3 days of camp this week. Ok down to business. So anyone here have younger siblings? Like the age where they just won't stop screaming while you're trying to sleep? Well I had that. And boy do I wish I learned this trick earlier. Turns out it's very easy to put someone to sleep. All you need to do is yank their arm really hard while stomping your feet and snapping your fingers and saying the word "together" 48 times. Simultaneously. Together. And then to make sure they're really out cold you tap the back of their neck 17 times. Yes I counted. Hypnotism can be a very useful tactic. I mean talent. Yeah, talent. Totally not a war tactic. Or a sports tactic. Like hypnotizing Coolam to teach them how to play anything other than baseball. Or maybe to build a normal basketball court. Do they even know what basketball is? Although what's the point. We all know they only like baseball because a home run means 7-11. Pshhhhhhhh 7-11. Yay. Ice cream's wayyyy better. Maybe if you could hit a home run in basketball they would like basketball. But that's crazy who would even say such a thing. Maybe the guy who made up moving screens in football. And jumping in camp Coolaid is also illegal? Saphek. While you're at it let's throw in a Chumrah and ban running. Pikuach Nefesh. And you know what? Forget the flags. Two hand touch is dangerous enough. He might push him too hard and he'll break his arm (iykyk- shoutout my chabura at Rabbi Lazar's night seder). We gotta bring them to us. Show 'em how real men play football. We'll do tackle but only when they come. And we'll ban defensive tackling while we're on offense. They'll have to ask us politely to step out of bounds. And I wanna see the look on their faces when they see our gorgeous gym. Forget the gym, I wanna see the look on their faces when they see our building. "What is thatttt". It's a building, buddy. Where's yours? Anyway, can't wait for another insane week. New leagues, same intensity. Get ready boys. Have an awesome shabbos

Hahn-Sight is 20-20

Not many people know this but as young boy Levi Adler was completely obsessed with tractors. He had pictures of tractors all over his bedroom walls; he had tractor toys, tractor t-shirts, a tractor carpet, the whole works. A few years ago he got an invitation to go to a tractor factory nearby to test-drive a brand new tractor. As you can imagine he was extremely excited! The great day came and he went to the factory for the test-drive. Unfortunately, something went terribly wrong with the tractor when Levi was driving it and it flipped over, completely demolishing and destroying the tractor. Levi being pure awesomeness was able to walk away unscathed. But the incident scared him away from tractors and he vowed to shed them from his life forever. All the posters came down, the toys were given away - tractors were GONE. Some time later, Levi was eating at a restaurant when the cook came running out of the kitchen yelling frantically! Levi asked him what was wrong and the cook said that the soup had spilled in the oven, and the whole kitchen was filled with smoke! With a cool calm confident look Levi stood up and said "I got this." He walked into the kitchen, took a huge breath, sucking in all the smoke. He then walked outside into the parking lot and blew all the smoke out. He went back into the restaurant where the air was now clear and sat back down in his seat. "That was amazing!" The cook exclaimed! "How did you do that?!?" "No problem", said Levi "I'm an ex-tractor fan."
