

Dear Campers...

Wow, what an incredible finish to an incredible week. Let me pose this question; did the bus really break down or was it part of color war break-out? This is a raging debate in camp. I think the P'shat is that Hashem knew what we were trying to do. He helped us out and had the bus break down. Let's always look to find the hand of Hashem in our lives. Whether it's something pleasant or something painful, realizing that it's from Hashem can bring us to a place of joy. Let's remember the P'shat of the Peekskill Rosh Yeshiva as to why we don't say Tachanun on Tisha B'Av. Since we come to meet Hashem through the pain of the events of Tisha B'Av, the end result is a place of joy since we are now closer to Hashem. Looking forward to a competitive and pumping color war ahead.

PS. Next trip we'll take out a lightning insurance policy

*Have a wonderful restful Shabbos
Rabbi Kramer*

THE GROMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION

I love waterparks. Easily one of the coolest ideas ever created. Who would've thought that pouring water down a slide and then inflating a round plastic donut to then fall to your doom could be so much fun. Forget the donut. How about the floor just opening up under you to a 90 foot drop. That's wild. Hats off to you if you're that guy. I feel like there are 3 types of guys at a waterpark. There's the guy who does ONLY the most extreme, wild, shake-in-your-boots kinda rides. Then there's the guy who needs to hit EVERY RIDE once. And there's the guy who just chills in the lazy river the whole time. Nothin' but sun and a soda. That's me. Or at least it used to be. Last year at this very same waterpark I actually tried some slides and realized how insanely awesome they are. My favorite wasn't actually a slide though. It was the cliff jump. I was so pumped to try it. But as it was about to be my turn they closed it. Something about the kids who went already not wanting to do it again. I mean it makes sense; it was a really far drop. And I think they forgot to put water at the bottom. I'm starting to think there wasn't actually an official cliff jump. That would explain why their weren't any lifeguards there. Or water.... Or maybe it closed because they were scared of the lightning. Although it was so nice of Camelbeach to give us that complimentary lightning show. How thoughtful! Nothing like driving 2 hours- and breaking down on the side of the road- to watch lightning. And Chabad. They were awesome by the way. We needa start creating some songs just like theirs. But preferably not 20 minutes each. That's a bit much. Seriously though, they were pretty cool. There's nothing like watching people celebrate pure happiness for Yiddishkeit. It's something we could all learn from. And they can learn from us about how to end a trip in an incredibly epic way, like breaking out COLOR WAR!!! LETS. GO. It's gonna be nuts. An intensity NO ONE has ever felt before. Get ready boys- but only if your on team Red (actually if you're on Blue also get ready because we're about to WIPE THE FLOOR with you guys). So yeah. Get ready boys. Have an awesome Shabbos, Yosef
