

Dear Campers...

Wow wet a trip!

Our white water rafting adventure on Tuesday was truly enjoyable.

The rapids, water wars (we had three buckets, how many did your raft have :-)) off road school bus rock bed, BBQ. These were all very Geshmak, but I would like to point out another aspect. Throughout the day, we interacted with various people whether it's other groups, our own guides, or the bus drivers. With all of them the Eeshay campers were polite, patient, respectful, and kind.

One of the guides kept expressing how impressed he was with Camp Eeshay.

So I wanted to give a big Yasher Koach to us all. That is precisely how an Eeshay camper comports himself. Keep up the great work PS- are there any more trips? Stay tuned.

*Have a wonderful restful Shabbos
Rabbi Kramer*

THE GROMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION

What a wild week! The intensity is so strong it burns. These games put me through a rollercoaster of emotions. The ups and downs, the winners and los-uh, almost winners, and every single play of not knowing what could possibly happen. I mean, a turtle passed to himself this week! (iykyk) My head's still spinning. Playoffs and Whitewater Rafting in one week?!? It's almost too much to handle. Whitewater rafting is probably one of my favorite things to do, second to kayaking. You gotta know how to do it right. First off, finishing first is really finishing last. Not only are you out of the water quickest, but you also have to wait for everyone else to finish. The ideal approach is to be so far behind that even the guy on the kayak has given up on you. Or just to not stop. Like that one boat tried. They saw everyone getting out and were like "nope, not us, see ya". The lead guide had to go out and grab 'em. I promise I've never seen anyone paddle faster than Chuck (or whatever his name was). Ok number 2: If you're not lying down face up in the middle of the raft while everyone else is working harder than George Washington's men for AT LEAST half the time you're on the water, why even come? Number 3: You gotta sing. Anything. Preferably "Row Row Row your boat". You got 7 guys on your raft. Grab some harmonies, mix it up a bit. You enter the Lehigh river as boys, and you leave it as a boy band. #EGT. On to number 4- and this one's important: You need Navy SEAL training. I'm serious. I mean look at Yitzi Cohen. I feared for my life on this trip and it had nothing to do with the river. It was chaos. Water flying everywhere. Buckets being stolen and grabbed and mini tug of war throughout fast pace rapids. And people. Literal PEOPLE were flying from boat to boat. And then the random tree branch to knock you unconscious. KLUNK. Game over. It doesn't get much better than that. Minus the tree branch part. That hurt. Anyway, playoffs are all wrapped up, and it's time to run it back. New season, same grind. Get ready boys. Have an awesome Shabbos, Yosef
